Wintering Cattle.

Rough food and grain are both necessary in wintering cattle in order to keep them in good, thrifty condition. Cattle will often live through the winter if they have the run of the straw stack or are fed sufficient fodder. But it has been definitely determined that there is absolute loss in feeding below the point where good condition is maintained, no gain when no animal just reaches that point, and a profit is only derived in going beyond it. Therefore, the first point to be considered in winter feeding of cattle for profit is to keep them in a good, thrifty condition.

The rough feed may be hay, clover, timothy or straw. Clover, timothy or timothy hay is good, while oat straw is usually considered better than wheat, provided, of course, that proper care has been taken to keep in a good condition. These may all be fed whole, and if supplied in sufficient quantities will materially in keeping the stock thrifty.

But a considerable saving may be made by running all of this kind of feed through a feed cutter, while, in addition, a much better opportunity is afforded of combining different materials and in this way making up a complete ration. Corn fodder, especially, may be fed much more conveniently in this shape in the stables or sheds, while the manure can be more readily handled. While with many farmers straw and fodder are considered cheap feed, it is rarely advisable at any time to feed more than any one meal than will be eaten up clean. This should be the rule whether fed whole or after running through a cutter.

To a very considerable extent the quantity of grain needed to keep the cattle thrifty during the winter will depend upon the means provided to feed them comfortably, and as the quantity of grain supplied makes a considerable difference in the cost, it is quite an item to economize as much as possible without lowering the condition.

Corn is the principal dependence of the Western farmer for grain for feeding his stock during the winter, especially his cattle and hogs. It is best to feed the corn separate from the roughness, provide troughs or feeding boxes for the grain, as well as mangers or racks for the roughness. If fed in the ear the corn should be broken or chopped into convenient pieces.

The advantage in grinding the corn is that it can be mixed with the cut feed better. Another advantage is that oil meal and bran can be fed with it, often in this way lessening the cost, as well as in increasing the variety. If ground with the intention of feeding it alone it is nearly always best to grind corn and cob together, as it is rarely advisable to feed corn meal alone. By grinding together it is made more bulky and it will be more thoroughly masticated and this implies a better digestion and assimilation.

When the corn is fed without grinding it will be economical to have at least two growing pigs to each steer to take up the waste. The grain ration must be largely determined by the conditions of the cattle. Feed liberally of roughness because it is the cheapest and then grain enough to keep them thrifty, while growing cattle will be the better for some exercise. It should never be given if it is necessary to expose the cattle, but with fattening cattle in the winter exercise is unnecessary and the quieter they can be kept the better.

Make it a point to keep the cattle as quiet and comfortable as possible and they will require less food to keep thrifty and gaining. The more rapidly an animal is fattened the less food is necessary to sustain its vitality. Liberal and abundant feeding is the most economical and a saving of time in producing the same effect is a gain in the profit.—The Republic.

Seed Potatoes.

Every farmer who digs his potatoes knows that some tubers are more prolific than others, and if these prolific tubers are planted the next spring the crop will be better than when the seed is selected in a haphazard way. If this principle of selecting the tubers from the best and most prolific roots is continued for several years, a marked change in the market value of the crop will be observed. The value of selection may be seen if carried out in connection with every family of plants.

The best way to keep seed potatoes, according to an English authority, is after thoroughly drying them in an open shed, to pack the tubers in shallow boxes in single layers crown upward. The boxes can so be made that they can be packed one upon the other in any light building secure from frost, and when the planting season comes round each tuber will be provided with one strong green sprout shooting out from its main crown eye. And this is the condition in which potatoes, especially those intended for an early crop, should be planted.

Here's Paying Farmine.

J. C. Russell, who owns a large tract of land about a mile and a half north of Traver, has nearly completed harvesting his peach and nectarine crop from eight acres on his ranch. There are about five acres of peaches and three of nectarines. From the peaches he has now harvested 13,000 pounds of dried peaches, which, at thirteen cents a pound, the price now quoted, would net him $1,690. It will cost him $295 to harvest this crop and market it, which will leave him a net profit of $1,425, or $285 per acre. The nectarine crop has done nearly as well, the difference being only in the price of the two fruits. Mr. Russell has hired all his work done, and therefore the expense account is correct and covers everything.—Fresno (Cal.) Advance.

FLYING OVER THE FENCE.—An exchange gives a device for preventing high flyers from flying over fences. It consists of a strand of wire stretched six inches from the top of the fence, inside, and parallel thereto, fastened to small projecting arms. Before a hen goes over a fence she always alights on top. Therefore, in endeavoring to fly on the top she strikes the wire and is thrown back. In a short time she gives it up.

Professor Roberts said at a recent Dairy Conference in New York that "The clover plant dies out because it cannot help it. It is a biennial, and cannot live longer than two years; that is the whole cause in a nutshell. It cannot live a longer time any more than corn can. If you want to retain it longer, reseed the field."

Evaporated Sweet Potatoes.

Few people know how easily sweet potatoes can be dried, even in the sun, and how handy and useful the dried potatoes are. At best sweet potatoes are a troublesome crop to keep, but when dried or cured in an evaporator they are really no trouble to keep and are always at hand for use on the table at short notice. They should be sliced and then evaporated. Then to use them they are soaked to restore the evaporated moisture and then baked in pans as the fresh ones often are. They are an admirable article for puddings and pies. For this purpose it would be better, it seems to me, to grind them into meal and put up in packages with directions for making puddings. Put up in this way it ought not to be much trouble to create a market for the dried sweet potatoes. There is already an evaporating plant at Greensboro, and if this, or some other establishment, would undertake the putting up of the sweet potato meal in packages the article would sell well. Grocersmen are slow to take hold of such products in the crude evaporated state, but in such packages, with a few attractive hand-bills and a lot of receipts for making the many delicious preparations that can be made from sweet potatoes, a market could soon be made for a product that Eastern North Carolina can supply in limitless quantities. Who will start this enterprise?—W. F. Massey.

Autumn Cultivation

Theoretically there is nothing so good as autumn cultivation and it is often spoken of as a practice which may be followed in any season. The weather controls the extent to which it can be carried out, and though much well executed there is nothing of greater value, yet injudiciously effected more harm than good may be done. The Mark Lane Express says:

Perhaps the greatest good can be done on heavy soils, as they are then turned over when in a dry condition, and soils inverted when dry rarely turn together, however much wet falls on them during winter; consequently they turn out dry and easily worked in spring; whereas, if ploughed out in winter, the condition in spring is more suggestive of a bar of old-fashioned soap than of material from which mellow seed-beds are made. The lighter soils can, of course, be worked advantageously in less favorable weather, so a longer season remains for working them; consequently an apparent backwardness may often be made good. But whatever the soil, there is no doubt that, where possible, it is an advantage to get forward with the tilling in autumn.

Strawberries are fruit; so are tomatoes, melons and cucumbers. One suggested distinction between a vegetable and a fruit is that the latter must be eaten raw, while the former must be cooked, but that doesn't hold always. Technically, a fruit incloses the seed, the plant and is matured underground; plant growth matured underground is a vegetable.

Over 300,000 olive trees are said to have been planted in the vicinity of Pomona, California. Olive growing is increasing with great rapidity.

Pulline Feathers.

Hens often have a habit of biting and pulling their feathers and greedily eating them until their bodies are bare. This practice, it is believed, is occasioned by want of salt, as when salted food is given them they make no attempt to continue the habit. Salt pork, chopped fine and fed twice a week, has been adopted with success, while others put a teaspoonful of salt with two quarts of meal or shorts moistened, well mixed, and feed it about twice a week. Fowls, like human beings, must have a certain allowance of salt.—American Poultry Yard.
